

SUMMARY: On 10/10/18 we sent a report that our buying/selling ratio is preparing us for an average market drop of 5.29% & an average of 13 trading days to get there. The accuracy was uncanny as SPY fell 5.19% to its low 13 days later (10/29/18). IWM fell 6.32% to its low 10 days later (10/24/18).

As markets settle in from the recent steep selloff, we wanted to revisit the special update report to see how accurate it was. You can see the original report by clicking here.

A few observations since this report was published:

- 1) the market traded lower, which was expected
- 2) the average trading days till reaching the local bottom historically = 13. After this report, SPY (S&P 500 ETF) hit lows 13 days later and IWM (Russell 2000 ETF) hit lows 10 days later.
- 3) the average return of IWM till the local bottom historically averages -5.29%. After this report, SPY returned -5.19% at the low (10/29/18) and IWM returned -6.32% at the low (10/24/18).
